Robbie pops the question from the top

A MORAY cyclist has proposed to his girlfriend in a uniquely romantic way after conquering one of France's toughest mountains.

Robbie Sheils put to use all of his family's heartbreak over recent years to reach the top of Alpe D'Huez.

The 52-year-old Lossie loon had originally planned to cycle up the mountain in June 2014 alongside his brother Paul and niece Emma.

Robbie planned the holiday as a fund raiser for MacMillan Cancer Relief.

Tragically, however, with just weeks to go to the challenge, Emma was diagnosed with a brain tumour which required immediate surgery.

The brothers wanted to call off the trip, but Emma insisted they went ahead.

McKay since the pair first met in a nightclub in the town 14 years ago. "I felt that every painful pedal stroke would be nothing compared to the pain these people close to me had endured."

"I also took some of my dad's ashes with me as he had been with me all throughout my life and, in this small way, I felt he was still there supporting me," he said.

After one hour and 44 minutes of constant and agonising climbing, Robbie finally reached the summit.

Once there, he put on something else he had carried with him up the mountain.

Sadly, Emma's condition had also deteriorated and, after going into an Edinburgh hospice, she died in January this year at the age of 31.

Alpe D'Huez is climbed regularly in the Tour de France and, at 1860 metres, is more than one-and-a-half times taller than Ben Nevis.

It also has no fewer than 21 hairpin bends and gradients of up to 20 per cent.

Robbie joked: "Their untimely deaths were the catalyst for this

I only put the one T-shirt in the drawer. I didn't want to give her the option of turning me down.

Knowing Jackie was just about option of turning me down. It was an emotional moment seeing Jackie wearing the T-shirt.

"I was in France with a party of cyclists and we all went for a meal that evening which turned into a bit of a celebration.

"Jackie and me have been together for a long time and I always wanted to do something unique. This seemed like the perfect way to do it.
